

Ban the Box:

Major U.S. Cities and Counties Adopt Fair Hiring Policies to Remove Unfair Barriers to Employment of People with Criminal Records

In a recent National Employment Law Project (NELP) report, we estimated that 65 million Americans—or one in four adults—have a criminal record that may show up on a routine background check report.¹ At the same time that the numbers of workers with criminal records have risen, the background check industry has expanded and overall, more employers are now using background checks as an employment screen than ever before. This resource guide documents the cities and counties that have recognized the devastating impact of these trends and taken steps to remove barriers to employment for qualified workers with criminal records, specifically by removing conviction history questions from job applications—a reform commonly known as “ban the box.”

As Mayor Richard Daley explained when he announced Chicago's policy promoting fairness in employment, "Implementing this new policy won't be easy, but it's the right thing to do. . . . We cannot ask private employers to consider hiring former prisoners unless the City practices what it preaches." Endorsing the value of a policy that allows workers to be judged on their merits, not on an old or unrelated conviction, the U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission issued a revised guidance in April 2012 on the use of arrest and conviction records in employment under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. In the guidance, which applies to all public and private employers, the Commission recommended as a "best practice . . . that employers not ask about convictions on job applications and that, if and when they make such inquiries, the inquiries be limited to convictions for which exclusion would be job related for the position in question and consistent with business necessity."

This updated guide summarizes the 42 local jurisdictions across the U.S. that have adopted "ban the box" in the past seven years, including Chicago, Jacksonville, Philadelphia, San Francisco, Memphis, and Baltimore—to highlight a few. The guide provides key information for local officials and advocates to initiate reforms in their communities, including contact information, media, and campaign material links. Just in 2011-2012, 14 cities and counties across the nation have adopted these policies emphasizing an applicant's qualifications rather than his or her past mistakes, such as New York City, Cleveland, and Durham. Of special significance, 11 cities and counties now extend the ban the box policy to private contractors or in the case of Philadelphia and Newark, to private employers, as well. In addition, as profiled in separate paper here, seven states have adopted ban the box policies.

Despite today's challenging job market, the momentum in support of ban the box hiring reforms continues to grow. In addition to this updated guide, NELP is available to provide assistance to communities seeking to join the ban the box movement. City Hiring Policies

Boston, MA (ordinance applies to City and vendors)

- ✓ Banned the box
- ✓ Background check only for otherwise qualified candidates
- ✓ Background checks only required for some positions
- ✓ Policies applies to vendors/contractors doing business with the City
- ✓ Incorporates EEOC language into selection criteria
- ✓ Right to appeal denial of employment

In 2004, Boston implemented policies that limit discrimination against people with criminal records in city government positions. In July 2006, Boston expanded those policies by removing the questions about criminal history from the job application and by requiring an estimated 50,000 private vendors that do business with the City to follow the City's hiring standards. Significantly, the revised job application begins with an anti-discrimination statement that Boston complies with all state and federal equal employment opportunity laws, while also listing "ex-offender status" as a classification protected under the civil rights laws of the City.

Under the policy, background checks are not required for all positions. Only when required by law or when the City or vendor has made a "good faith determination that the relevant position is of such sensitivity,” is a background check conducted on “otherwise qualified” applicants for a position. Often, a background check is not conducted until a conditional offer of employment has been made. Employers must also consider the age and seriousness of the offense and the “occurrences in the life of the Applicant since the crime(s).” The ordinance includes an appeal and the right to present information related to the “accuracy and/or relevancy” of the criminal record. A broad community coalition called Massachusetts Alliance to Reform CORI (MARC) supported these developments.

San Francisco, CA (board of supervisors resolution applies to City and County)

- ✓ Banned the box
- ✓ Background check only for finalists for positions
- ✓ Incorporates EEOC language into selection criteria

The campaign to "ban the box" on San Francisco's applications for public employment was led by All of Us or None, a national organizing initiative of formerly incarcerated people. In 2005, the San Francisco Board of Supervisors approved a resolution initiated by All of Us or None calling for San Francisco to eliminate hiring discrimination against people with criminal records by removing the request for criminal history information on the initial job application for public employment. The resolution was implemented as a municipal hiring policy. An individual's past convictions can only be considered after an applicant has been identified as a finalist for a position. The exception is for those jobs where state or local laws expressly bar people with convictions from employment, in which case the City conducts its background review at an earlier stage of the hiring process.

In 2011, the San Francisco Human Rights Commission and the San Francisco Reentry Council recommended expanding the City's policy to all private employers, vendors, and most housing providers.

Chicago, IL (Mayor's initiative applies to City)

- ✓ Banned the box
- ✓ Background check only after conditional offer of employment
- ✓ Incorporates EEOC language into selection criteria

In May 2004, Chicago Mayor Richard Daley created the Mayoral Policy Caucus on Prisoner Reentry, bringing together government and community leaders to address the challenges facing the 20,000 people each year who return to Chicago after being released from prison. In January 2006, the Caucus issued a major report calling for broad reforms of City policy. Concurrently with the release of the report, Mayor Daley announced several major "reentry" initiatives, including reform of the City's hiring policies as recommended by the Caucus. The Mayor's press release described a new hiring policy requiring the City to "balance the nature and severity of the crime with other factors, such as the passage of time and evidence of rehabilitation Put more simply, this change means that city hiring will be fairer and more common sense."

Implementing the Mayor's hiring policy, the Chicago Department of Human Resources has issued guidelines imposing standards on all City agencies regulating hiring decisions related to people with criminal records. For the first time, Chicago now requires all agencies to take into account the age of an individual's criminal record, the seriousness of the offense, evidence of rehabilitation, and other mitigating factors before making hiring decisions. As part of the hiring process, the City also revised its job application in February 2007 to remove the question about criminal history. Now, after the City makes a conditional offer of employment, the applicant fills out a screening questionnaire card that requires disclosure of any criminal record.

- ✓ Background check only for otherwise qualified candidates
- ✓ Background checks only required for some positions
- ✓ Incorporates EEOC language into selection criteria

In December 2006, Mayor Christopher Coleman of St. Paul directed the City's Human Resources Department to reform its hiring process so that "all applicants have a full and fair opportunity for employment." The City thus amended its employment application to remove questions regarding criminal history. That same month, the City Council approved a resolution calling on the City to "make a good faith determination as to which specific positions of employment are of such sensitivity and responsibility that a background check is warranted." The resolution also mandated that background checks be performed only after an applicant is determined to be otherwise qualified for that position.

Like St. Paul, Minneapolis passed a resolution banning the box in December 2006. The Minneapolis resolution shares many characteristics with the St. Paul resolution, including banning the box, making a "good faith" determination of which positions require background checks, and performing background checks on applicants only after they have been determined to be otherwise qualified. - ✓ Incorporates EEOC language into selection criteria
- ✓ Right to appeal denial of employment
- ✓ Provides copy of background check report

Oakland changed its job application in 2007 to eliminate questions about conviction histories. The new process did not require additional resources. Since implementing this practice, only a small number of applicants have been screened out from employment due to their criminal histories. Working with All of Us or None, the City improved its policy in 2010. The City conducts background checks on applicants after a conditional offer, but only for those positions required by law or the City has made a “good faith determination” that the position warrants it. The City also notifies the applicant of the potential adverse employment action, provides a copy of the background report, and provides the applicant an opportunity to rebut the accuracy or relevancy of the background report. Final decisions are based on job-relatedness and other EEOC factors.

- ✓ Policies applies to vendors/contractors doing business with the City
- ✓ Incorporates EEOC language into selection criteria
- ✓ Right to appeal prior to adverse determination

In May 2007, Cambridge implemented policies limiting discrimination against people with criminal records in city government positions. In January 2008, the City Council passed an ordinance extending the requirements of Cambridge's hiring policy to private vendors that do business with the City.

Consistent with the City's hiring policy, vendors contracting with Cambridge wait to conduct a criminal background check until the job applicant is found to be "otherwise qualified" for the position. To determine the applicant's suitability for the position, vendors are required to consider a variety of factors, including "the relevance of the crime to the position sought," the age and seriousness of the crime, and evidence of rehabilitation. In addition, the Cambridge ordinance requires the vendor to notify the applicant of a potential adverse decision based on the criminal record. The employer must give the applicant a copy of the criminal record and the right to present information related to the accuracy and relevancy of the information reported.

- ✓ Background check only for otherwise qualified applicants
- ✓ Background checks only required for some positions

In December 2007, with the backing of Mayor Sheila Dixon, the City of Baltimore's Board of Estimates unanimously approved changes to the City's administrative hiring policy. The Board of Estimates—composed of the Mayor, President of the City Council, Comptroller, City Solicitor, and Director of Public Works—is the governing body that oversees the fiscal and administrative functions of the City. In accordance with the policy, the City removed the criminal history question from its job application. Applicants are not asked about their criminal history on the initial application. Instead, where applicable, the applicant's criminal history is reviewed at the final stages in the hiring process.

The City also implemented a policy to determine which positions qualified as "Positions of Trust" and thus require a background check. Employment applications for positions that are not positions of trust do not require applicants to disclose prior convictions or any other criminal history information.

Following Travis County's lead, the City approved a "Ban the Box" ordinance in October 2008. The criminal background investigation questions were removed from the on-line employment application. For non-safety/law enforcement jobs, criminal background investigations are required only for positions that have financial responsibility or work with children, the disabled or elderly. When the job falls in one of these categories, the background investigation is undertaken only after an applicant has been selected as the top candidate. For public safety/law enforcement positions, the Austin Police Department conducts the criminal background investigation. Featured in the February 2012 HR Magazine, Director Mark Washington, notes that since the City adopted this policy, more qualified candidates with criminal backgrounds—candidates who previously may have opted against completing the application due to the background questions—have applied. "There are extremely talented and qualified people who happen to be ex-offenders," Washington adds.

In October 2008, the City of Berkeley's Human Resources Department eliminated disclosure of conviction history information from the City's job application at the request of City Council. Berkeley does not require disclosure of conviction history information until an applicant is selected for the position and has received a conditional offer of employment. The Human Resources Department then reviews conviction history information, which is kept confidential. The evaluation includes "an assessment of the relationship between a conviction and the functions of the position; number of convictions; time elapsed since the conviction, evidence of rehabilitation, and any other mitigating circumstances." The City obtains conviction history from the California Department of Justice for identified public safety, recreation, and cash-handling/asset management positions only; for all other positions, conviction history self-disclosure is required. Police Department hires are exempted.

In December 2008, Norwich's City Council voted to move "Beyond the Box" and reduce barriers to employment for people with criminal records. A large group of advocates including Connecticut Pardon Team, A Better Way Foundation, Evergreen Family Oriented Tree/Clean Slate of New Haven, CABHN, Legal Assistance Resource Center and Greater Hartford Legal Aid worked together to ensure the City Council passed the ordinance, the first of its kind in Connecticut at that time, paving the way for other cities and the State to follow suit.

The ordinance removed the question inquiring into a person's criminal history from the initial application for city jobs. Although the City continues to background check all employees before a binding offer of employment, it now does so only after an applicant has been interviewed and a conditional offer of employment has been made. Seattle, WA (personnel director hiring policy applies to City)

- ✓ Banned the box
- ✓ Background check only for otherwise qualified applicants
- ✓ Background checks only required for some positions
- ✓ Right to appeal denial of employment
- ✓ Provides copy of background check report

In April 2009, the Personnel Director for the City of Seattle issued a memo to all department heads announcing the completion and implementation of the Citywide Personnel Rule for Criminal Background Checks. Based on the policy, Seattle does not ask job applicants about arrests or prior convictions on job applications, and limits the categories of jobs which require background checks. An individual's past conviction history is not considered until later in the hiring process and only for jobs falling within specific categories. The applications for jobs which require a background check include a disclaimer stating that a background check will be required.

As described in Seattle's policy, state law prohibits public agencies from refusing to hire someone or refusing to grant a license based solely on a criminal conviction. However, a person can be denied employment with a public agency or a license based on a prior felony conviction that is directly related to the employment, provided it is less than 10 years old. The background check does not consider arrests that did not result in conviction. Finally, should Seattle decide not to hire someone based on his or her conviction history, the City provides the applicant with a copy of the background report, a copy of "A Summary of Your Rights Under the Fair Credit Reporting Act," and allows the applicant ten working days to respond to a proposed non-hiring action. Seattle is currently considering expanding the ban the box policy to private employers.

In April 2009, the HR department removed the language relating to information on criminal charges from its applications. In June 2009, Worcester’s City Council passed the Fair CORI Practices Ordinance. This ordinance applies to “all persons and businesses supplying goods and/or services to the city of Worcester.” Per the policy, public employers and vendors who do business with the City are prohibited from inquiring into an applicant’s criminal history on any initial employment application, and may only perform a background check once an applicant is identified as otherwise qualified. Background checks may only be performed when mandated by law, or when the city or vendor “determines that the position in question is of such sensitivity” that a review of the applicant’s criminal history is warranted. The comprehensive law also requires that the person reviewing the background report be trained to do so, and that they apply a list of factors to be considered. Finally, applicants may appeal if an adverse decision is made based on the criminal history.

In 2008, the City Council adopted an ordinance reforming both its hiring procedures and its contractor bidding policies. In July 2009, the City’s Human Resources Department released the revised standard. The directive states that department heads will “not inquire about or consider criminal background check information in making a hiring decision.” Instead, “criminal information disclosure is required as part of the post-offer new hire process.” (emphasis in original). The application instructions even encourage people with a criminal record to apply for city jobs. The criminal background check screening is centralized in the Human Resources Department. Moreover, the screening process requires taking into account the specific duties of the job, the age of the offense, and rehabilitation. Denied applicants may appeal to Human Resources. Contractors are required to tally job opportunities for people with criminal records and report back to the City.

- ✓ Banned the box
- ✓ Background check only for otherwise qualified applicants

In October 2009, Bridgeport's City Council ratified changes to the City's civil service rules regarding criminal history investigations of applicants. Under the rules, the Personnel Director will seek information about applicants' criminal histories only after the applicant has been found "otherwise eligible" to take the civil service examination. The initial employment application includes a disclaimer that criminal history information will be sought later in the application or examination process.

In addition to considering the criminal histories of applicants later in the hiring process, the rules require the Personnel Director to consider the following factors when making an employment decision based on a person's criminal history: "the nature and seriousness of the offense; time elapsed since the conviction; age when convicted; the degree to which the conviction is related to the duties and responsibilities of the job and the bearing the conviction has on the applicants' fitness and ability to perform such duties and responsibilities; evidence of rehabilitation and the interest of the City in protecting property and the welfare and safety of public and employees." Candidates who are disqualified because of their criminal record have the right to appeal the Personnel Director's decision to the Civil Service Commission. The Commission has the authority to "grant the appellant such relief as the Commission deems appropriate or to deny the appeal."

- ✓ Provides copy of background check report

In June 2010, the Memphis City Council passed an ordinance to reduce barriers to employment for the City's estimated 8,915 citizens on probation or parole. The ordinance bans the box and, "except as otherwise dictated by state and federal law," permits inquiry into an applicant's criminal history only after the applicant has been determined to be otherwise qualified. However, the ordinance still requires applicants to complete a form listing their entire criminal history prior to the City conducting a background check.

If, after conducting a background investigation, the City makes an adverse hiring decision, the applicant is entitled to a copy of his or her "conviction history report with a highlight(s) of the particular conviction(s) that relate to the job's responsibilities, thus warranting a denial of employment." The applicant may then provide information rebutting the accuracy and/or relevance of the conviction history report. The ordinance includes a list of factors the City must consider when making an employment determination based on an applicant's conviction record.

If a criminal background check is the basis for denying employment, the applicant receives a copy of all documents containing criminal record information and is given at least 10 business days to dispute or correct the included information. Finally, when considering an applicant's criminal history in making an employment decision, the Cincinnati Human Resources Department must consider certain criteria, including whether the past offense(s) directly relate to the job responsibilities, the age of the person at the time of the offense(s), and any documentation or testimony demonstrating an applicant's rehabilitation.

- ✓ Banned the box
- ✓ Background check only after applicant selected
- ✓ Policies apply to private employers in the City

On March 31, 2011, Philadelphia became the first city to ban the box for both public and private positions. The ordinance prohibits any employer from asking about, considering, or sharing information regarding non-conviction arrests that are not pending. The ordinance further prohibits inquiry into an applicant's conviction history "during the application process," defined as the time beginning when an applicant inquires about the employment and ending when the employer has accepted an application, or "before and during the first interview." Employers must then wait until after an applicant has completed an application and had a first interview before inquiring into the applicant's conviction history. The ordinance provides an exception from these rules "if the inquires or adverse actions prohibited [above] are specifically authorized by any other applicable law."

- ✓ Banned the box
- ✓ Incorporates EEOC language into selection criteria

In December 2010, the nation's capital joined the movement to ban the box by passing the Returning Citizens Public Employment Inclusion Act of 2010. After congressional review, the law went into effect in 2011. For non-covered positions, public employers are prohibited from inquiring into an applicant's criminal history during the initial screening of applications. If a public employer considers an applicant's criminal history, the applicant is permitted to provide an explanation of their history to the employer, and the employer must consider rehabilitation and other evidence of good conduct. Importantly, public employers are required to consider the beneficial public policy of ensuring access to jobs for people with a criminal record.

In February 2011, the City of Durham removed questions about criminal history from all employment applications. Potential employees who have been given a conditional offer of employment are subject to a background check as are volunteers. Background investigations are conducted on applicants for public safety positions, financially sensitive positions, and positions in direct contact with minors before applicants are placed in finalist status.

- ✓ Banned the box
- ✓ Background check only after conditional offer
- ✓ Policies applies to contractors doing business with the City
- ✓ Incorporates EEOC language into selection criteria

On April 5, 2011, the City of Compton passed a resolution to provide equal employment opportunities for people with criminal records, effective July 1, 2011. A criminal background check is delayed until after a conditional offer of employment is made. The city prohibits the consideration of any convictions that are not job-related in the course of an employment decision. Factors to consider include: (1) whether the position provides the opportunity for the commission of a similar offense; (2) whether the individual has committed other offenses since the conviction; (3) the nature and gravity of the offense and; (4) time since the offense. In order to promote model hiring policies, the City requires employers that receive local government contracts to adopt the same hiring policies.

New York City, NY (executive order applies to City and some contractors)

- ✓ Banned the box
- ✓ Policies applies to contractors doing business with the Human Services Department

In August 2011, New York City Mayor Michael Bloomberg announced a $130 million initiative to increase the education and employment prospects for African American and Latino men. Recognizing the disparate impact of criminal records on these communities and the effect on employment, Mayor Bloomberg also signed Executive Order No. 151 banning the box. The policy prohibits City agencies from asking about an applicant's criminal history on initial job application documents or in the initial interview. When an agency does review an applicant's criminal history, it is limited to considering felony convictions, unsealed misdemeanor convictions, and pending charges. Agencies may request waivers to make additional inquiries. In efforts to expand the policy, the City has now extended the ban the box policy to contractors doing business with the Human Services Department. These contractors may not may inquiries about convictions until after the first interview.

Approved by Mayor Langford on December 23, 2011, Atlantic City, NJ banned the box for city positions. The ordinance also requires all vendors doing business with the City to have practices, policies and standards that are consistent with the City's, and makes consideration of vendors' hiring policies, practices and standards part of the criteria to be considered when awarding contracts. The ordinance permits a background check only after a conditional offer has been given, requires consideration of rehabilitation and the EEOC criteria, and gives applicants a right to appeal a denial of employment.

On September 19, 2012, the Municipal Council passed the most comprehensive ban the box ordinance in the nation to date. The ordinance applies to the City, private employers, local licensing, and to housing as well. Inquiries into an applicant's criminal history are delayed until a conditional offer of employment is made by the employer, and there is a limited "lookback" period for offenses, ranging from eight years for indictable offenses and five years for disorderly persons convictions or municipal ordinance convictions. Several other components of the ordinance stand out, including: a prohibition on advertisements that limit eligibility based on the criminal record; an enforcement provision with fines for violations; and detailed mandated notices to denied applicants. The New Jersey Institute for Social Justice and the Integrated Justice Alliance worked closely with the sponsor of the ordinance, Councilmember Ron C. County Hiring Policies

Alameda County, (Oakland & Berkeley, CA area; resolution applies to County)

- ✓ Banned the box
- ✓ Incorporates EEOC language into selection criteria

In October 2006, the Alameda County Board of Supervisors unanimously adopted a resolution urging the Civil Service Commission and the Department of Human Resources to implement a "pilot project . . . in order to mitigate or eliminate the negative impact against individuals who have been incarcerated or otherwise have criminal convictions to assist with the successful reintegration into the community." Beginning in March 2007, Alameda County removed the question on the job application that required all applicants to list their criminal convictions.

Self-disclosure of criminal history information does not occur until the last step of the examination process and fingerprinting for background checks is performed after a conditional offer. In addition, to protect against potential discrimination, a special unit in the Human Resources Department performs an analysis to determine if the conviction is, in fact, related to the specific functions of the job. As reported by the Interim Director of Human Resources Services in March 2012, the County has not had any problems with the policy and "has benefited from hiring dedicated and hardworking County employees because of the policy change."

Multnomah County (Portland, OR area; administrative policy applies to County)

- ✓ Banned the box
- ✓ Incorporates EEOC language into selection criteria

In October 2007, Multnomah County removed the question about criminal history from both on-line and hard-copy applications. The Multnomah County policy is similar to the policy implemented in the City and County of San Francisco. The Portland-based group, Partnership for Safety and Justice, was instrumental in the adoption of the county hiring policy as part of their "Think Outside of the Box" campaign.

When an applicant's criminal history is considered, at a later stage of the hiring process, the Multnomah County policy requires an individualized determination of whether the conviction bears a rational relationship to the job. According to the policy, important factors to consider include the nature of the crime for which the applicant was convicted; any positive changes demonstrated since the conviction; the age at time of arrest; and the amount of time that has elapsed since the arrest occurred.

Travis County, (Austin, TX area; administrative policy applies to County)

- ✓ Banned the box
- ✓ Background check only after applicant selected for hire
- ✓ Background checks only required for some positions
- ✓ Incorporates EEOC language into selection criteria

In April 2008, acting upon the recommendation of Justice and Public Safety and the Director of Human Resources for Travis County, the Travis County Commissioner's Court voted to remove the question about an applicant's criminal history from county job applications. The Travis County Reentry Roundtable Report, which was completed in 2007, recommended changes to the county's hiring practice as a key way to increase employment opportunities for people reentering the community.

In order to foster better integration of people with criminal records into the county workforce, the Human Resources Department trains hiring managers to consider "circumstances such as length of time since offense, seriousness of the offense, frequency of criminal incidents, and other mitigating factors." Additional training assists all new employees, including people with criminal records, in adapting to the workplace environment.

Effective October 1, 2012, the County will not inquire into an applicant's criminal history on an initial employment application form, unless explicitly mandated by law. The threshold for inquiry is after an applicant's credentials have been reviewed, it has been determined that the applicant is otherwise qualified for a position, and the applicant has been recommended for hire by the department where the vacancy exists. Records of criminal arrests, dismissals, or convictions which have been expunged may not be used. While former offenders would still be kept out of certain occupations, the policies align with a new public safety agenda in which cities are creating opportunities for employment, housing and drug treatment to reduce recidivism. By focusing on crime prevention, this 'smart on crime' approach responds to the disproportionate number of former offenders re-entering society through large U.S. cities. Asking about criminal records early in the hiring process serves as a knock-out punch before candidates have a chance to be considered on their qualifications, and unnecessarily exposes employers to allegations they are automatically tossing out applications with a criminal record." Rosen also says that when employers ask about a past criminal record, they "need to make an effort to not ask a broadly worded question that may encompass criminal records that are either too old or irrelevant for the job, since that can have the impact of imposing a lifetime ban on an applicant."
